I will be out of the office this afternoon on personal business.

Dave,

I hope this message finds you well.

I am reaching out with a request to have you sit in and perhaps facilitate a phone call between me and interns, Aly Prouty and Jennifer Walters.

Despite having in-depth discussion about their commitment to advancing their data mining on behalf of my project and at a time of my travels, including a conference call last week at the start of my trip, the students have seemingly met other priorities that have stalled any advancement on our combined work efforts.

I reached out to them this morning and took issue with the fact that neither of these students had the courtesy to even reply back to me particularly on a morning reserved for our scheduled work. Here's what I initially sent:

"Ladies. I hope this message finds you both well. Thinking of you both today as we would normally be meeting to data mine. Upon review of the spreadsheet I noticed the last update was Mar. 21. I was concerned this might happen in my absence but was optimistic you both would honor your commitment to contributing on your own independent time. Please let me know if there are any problems or obstacles that are disrupting the flow of this data project. We are nearing final day and your internship contributions are being depended on right Now. If it is helpful, structurally, I can arrange for oversight with Dave Umhoefer so that you can both still meet under our regularly scheduled times—perhaps in his office? I'm sure he'd be open to that. Thank you and please let me know how you'd like to proceed."

I also sent an attachment showing the history of the last time they had worked on the spreadsheet.

I would appreciate any time you can allow to understand how we can move forward from here -- whether the students require supervision during my continued absence next week. I'm quite disappointed in their lack of engagement at this stage in the investigation.

Kindly,

Dave,

I am very clearly asking for your participation and mediation. They have responded but I am needing your support to bring some level of discipline to the project of which I feel has been remiss beyond my diligent attempts. I understand schedules on the road while juggling O'Brien responsibilities and hope you can adhere to the same. Thank you for your support in this regard.

Hi Jenni,

I typically will talk to the fellow and the students separately if mediation is necessary, then bring the parties together to see if we can agree on what's happening and what needs to be done.

I imagine they have kicked it in gear after your text, but if not, let's talk early tomorrow.

Thanks,

D

Dave.
I don't know what's being lost on you.
Again— I am asking for your intervention.

My students are delinquent in delivering upon their promised work.

I reiterate: this is the third time inaskint for your support to assist in disciplining my student interns.

But I am pleased for this documentation in knowing the gap of internal support for future reference.

My outreach to you at this stage of our working relationship should be enough for you to want to step in.
